

How can these five approaches of philosophy help situate our ethical decisions?

Professor Dan Geva, Department of Film, Faculty of Arts, Faculty of Society and Culture, Beit Berl College, Israel

Duration of video clip: 1 minute and 8 seconds

So now it would be fascinating to kind of see has the five-position generated an over an overarching conclusion, or a sharper lens on the problem. I think it does, I think that if you collect them and realise that Aristotle's action, Kant's intention, Mill's outcome, de Beauvoir's freedom and Gilligan's, or whoever, ethics of care. "Careness" is not a linear process or binary process, it's an, just like you look at the stars, it's a map, so if I analyse the map, I think that you've done a good job.

The essential ingredients of virtuosity, of caring, of good intentions, of caring outcome, that raises the sentiments of the intellect, the imagination, and the mind are there. Therefore all the rest is for semiotic classes, editing classes, technicalities.