

ual:

Are there definitive answers in ethics?

Dr Tiffany Fairey, Kings College London & founder of Photovoice

Duration of video clip: 0 minutes and 26 seconds

I think as a film it (Justine) raises all sorts of questions, and for me that is vital to our thinking about ethics, because in ethics there aren't definitive answers to anything, and all we can really do as practitioners is to carry on asking the questions and not stop asking the questions; and when I watched Justine I came away with loads of questions, and that felt like a very positive thing in terms of me thinking of my ethical practice.